Report Summary

- 1 First Breathe: Take all the information you see ahead in your stride. Perhaps individuals haven't seen you operating at your best? This doesn't mean that you are not capable of more. They may have higher expectations or may not have seen the extent of your true capabilities. You will see your own self-assessment scores compared to that of the individuals you invited to respond. If you don't agree with the scores provided, take a step back and do your own research. Develop a holistic understanding of why you may have received these ratings.
- 2 Unused strengths are quickly lost. Like any muscle in your body, you need to constantly practice and develop your capabilities to ensure that they stay assets to you.
- 3 The information provided has been kept anonymous, and there is a reason for that. Individuals will provide more honest feedback when they know it will not be traced back to them. Do not try and find out who the individuals who answered are as this will affect the honesty of future responses.
- 4 Our ratings will be displayed on a scale from 0 (needs improvement) to 5 (exceptional).

CONCLUSION

Hi Art Dealer,

Thank you for taking the time to complete our assessment and congratulations on taking a step towards better understanding yourself and learning what you need to do to get ahead in life and your career. Below, we have some advice on how to better leverage your Behavioural strengths as well as how to work on improving your development opportunities.

Behavioural strengths: (top scoring & hidden talent)

The goal of this assessment is to help you gain a better sense of self-awareness which is known to be strongly linked to better job performance. As a next step, take some time to reflect on your results. You may discover that you are likely to perform well in tasks and responsibilities that tap into your strengths. You can also think about your natural strengths from a motivational perspective. You are likely to be more motivated to perform activities that you prefer, and your strengths are also likely to determine the environments that you enjoy. It's thus important to play to your strengths and figure out the type of work that you are naturally more inclined to excel in and enjoy doing, which would also lead to high level of job satisfaction in addition to superior performance.

For each strength that you are now aware, try to be as objective as you can when looking at the relationship between your performance and your strengths. We highly suggest that you build on the strengths identified in this assessment by thinking about what you can start or continue doing in order to further leverage your natural abilities. Also keep in mind that as you reflect on these strengths, be aware of when you might be relying too heavily on a certain strength that may lead to unbalanced results.

Development opportunities: (lowest scoring & blind spots)

As a result of this report, you are now also aware of potential developmental opportunities. These are behaviours that may not play to your intrinsic inclinations but are still important for the high performance. The results of your assessment indicate that these behaviours may not come naturally to you when compared to that of your strengths as discussed above. Thus, activities that require these behaviours may not feel engaging or rewarding to you, and you may be less motivated to perform these activities and they may also take longer to do while requiring more efforts from you.

The next step to take in order to improve on your development areas would be to work in conjunction with your manager/mentor/coach/ and create an action plan for the behavioural changes that would be the most beneficial for you to work on in order to see the greatest change in your performance. We suggest following the SMART goal setting technique so that your goals are specific, measurable, attainable, realistic, and time bond. The reason why we recommend doing this with someone else is so that they can keep you accountable and give you guidance and feedback as you embark on the journey to make these changes.
